WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

So you think it's been a mild winter, eh? Well, I suppose it's seemed that way. Despite the sudden flurry that coated the city in mid-November — and yielded "Einstein" the famed snow camel of Route 309 — it's been a virtually snowless winter with a snow-free Christmas. Well, all that could be changing. Beginning Thursday night, the first trails of a snowstorm are expected to move into the region. But the real games won't begin until the weekend, when a storm is set to hit the entire East Coast. With sudden temperature drops and heavy precipitation, this weekend could possibly see Philly hit with a flash freeze or ice storm. Read all the details inside and on MetroPhilly.us.

27 DAYS PARTIAL GOVT SHUTDOWN

1 MAN PLOTTED ANTI-TANK ROCKET ATTACK ON WH

A 21-year-old man from Georgia has been arrested and charged with allegedly plotting to attack the White House with an anti-tank rocket, the Justice Department said on Wednesday. Hasher Jallal Taheb, of the Atlanta suburb of Cumming, was arrested in Gwinnett County on Wednesday and appeared briefly in federal court in downtown Atlanta in a case brought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Byung Pak, the U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Georgia, told reporters. "His alleged intent was to attack the White House and other targets of opportunity in the Washington, D.C., area by using explosive devices, including an improvised explosive device, an anti-tank rocket," Pak told reporters. All threats have been neutralized, Pak said in a statement. The FBI said in the statement that the charges against Taheb were the result of a year-long investigation, which was the "direct result of a tip from the community." According to the complaint, Taheb told an FBI confidential source that he had applied for a U.S. passport and said his previous passport had been misplaced.

2 SYRIA BLAST THAT KILLED US TROOPS CLAIMED BY IS

A bomb attack claimed by Islamic State killed two U.S. troops and two civilians working for the U.S. military in northern Syria on Wednesday, weeks after President Donald Trump said the group had been defeated there and that he would pull out all American forces. The attack in Manbij appeared to be the deadliest on U.S. forces in Syria since they deployed on the ground there in 2015. The town is controlled by a militia allied to U.S.-backed Kurdish forces. The U.S. military confirmed four Americans were killed and said three U.S. troops were wounded in the explosion, which an Islamic State-affiliated site said was the work of a suicide bomber. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights monitoring group said 19 people had been killed in all, including four Americans. It was unclear what impact the blast might have on Trump's calculus after he confounded his own national security team with a surprise decision last month to withdraw all 2,000 U.S. troops from Syria, declaring Islamic State had been defeated there. No experts believe Islamic State has been defeated, despite the group having lost almost all of the territory it held.

People get a free lunch at a pop-up eatery hosted by celebrity chef Jose Andres for furloughed government employees and their families in Washington, D.C., on Wednesday, the 26th day of the U.S. government partial shutdown.

4 CAREY SUES FORMER EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

Singer Mariah Carey on Wednesday sued her former assistant for breaking a nondisclosure agreement, negligence and theft, according to court documents. Carey, one of the world's best-selling singers with 200 million records sold and hits including "We Belong Together," is seeking at least $3 million in damages from Lianna Azarian and a restraining order to keep her former assistant from further breaking the nondisclosure agreement, according to papers filed in New York State Supreme Court. Azarian worked for Carey from March 2015 through November 2017 as an executive assistant, court documents showed. Lawyers for Carey did not immediately respond to requests for comment. Azarian did not immediately respond to requests for comment. Entertainment website TMZ.com reported on Wednesday that Azarian had secretly recorded Carey and threatened to release "embarrassing" videos unless the pop star paid up to $8 million. Reuters was not immediately able to confirm those details.

5 FINANCIAL SERVICES PANEL FOR OCASIO-CORTEZ

U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, part of a new crop of Democrats swept into office this year on a stronger liberal platform, said she is poised to serve on a key congressional panel overseeing Wall Street, a potential setback for the financial services industry. "I'm looking forward to digging into the student loan crisis, examining for-profit prisons/ICE detention, and exploring the development of public & postal banking," Ocasio-Cortez tweeted late Tuesday. "I am very grateful for the opportunity to sit on this committee as a freshman." Other incoming progressive Democrats, including Katie Porter, Rashida Tlaib and Ayanna Pressley, are also expected to secure spots on the committee, Politico reported. Representatives for Democratic U.S. Rep. Maxine Waters, the panel chair, could not be immediately reached for comment. Their reported appointments to the House Financial Services Committee would be a setback for the industry, which had hoped the committee would be filled by moderate Democrats more sympathetic to their issues.

Snow, ice and harsh cold temps heading to Philadelphia region

Brrrr! Get ready for an arctic blast of snow and ice that will hit the region in the coming days.

SAM NEWHOUSE

GETTY IMAGES

As has been said many times before, winter is coming. But this time, it's really coming to Philadelphia — just a few weeks later than usual.

Philly had a snowless Christmas, and while temps plunged to the low-20s in early January, it has been nowhere near as bad as last winter's arctic New Year's blast.

All that could change in the days to come. Forecasters are now warning of snowfall beginning Thursday night, to be followed by a potentially huge ice storm up and down the Eastern Seaboard. The storm system currently slamming the Midwest is headed east.

The developing winter storm, alternately referred to as a "significant winter storm" and a "potential nor'easter," is reportedly the same system that snowed in Colorado and Arizona last weekend and dumped as much as 20 inches of snow in places like Missouri earlier this week, where three people died in snow-related incidents.

The storm is forecast to weaken significantly as it heads east, but it still currently is being described as the strongest forecast storm of the season. Pittsburgh is warning of a potential nor'easter. In New York City, some have even warned of up to a foot of snow.

For the Philadelphia region, according to the National Weather Service, the games will begin late Thursday, Jan. 17, as snowfall moves into the region for the second time this season. While Philadelphia is only forecast to get one to two inches of snow, and South Jersey will get a similar dusting, there could be two to four falling in the Lehigh Valley between I-95 and I-78.

Thursday evening and Friday morning commutes are both expected to be a slog due to the snow, the National Weather Services warns. (Hint: call in sick, if you can.)

While Friday may be affected by residual snow, the forecast

isn't as bad — with temps forecast in the 40s. (This may be the best time to stock up on groceries and other supplies for the maelstrom to come.)

The real bad news is expected over the weekend, when at some point on Saturday, a powerful winter storm system is expected to move into the region, according to forecasters with Accuweather and the National Weather Service.

While forecasts vary, it's supposed to be a heavy-precipitation storm that will strike at some point on Saturday while the temps are still in the 40s, possibly beginning by dropping heavy rain on the area. (Saturday is also when the third annual Women's March is scheduled, with Philadelphia hosting two dueling women's marches on opposite ends of the Parkway.)

But overnight Saturday, a potential "flash freeze" is predicted, with temperatures expected to drop by 20 degrees or more. The rain will turn to ice, and water on the streets of Philadelphia will ice over rather quickly.

That could lead to hazardous road conditions, frozen pipes and all the other crises that beset the city in times of extreme cold.

Schools already are set to be closed for Martin Luther King Jr. Day on Monday.

While the storm will have moved past Philly by that point, some snow and ice could be here to stay. Powerful gusts of wind are predicted, as well as freezing temperatures — they're not expected to rise above 20 degrees on M.L.K. Day. So Philly's biggest volunteering day of the season may be significantly curbed as well.

By Tuesday, the precipitation will be gone, but temps are not forecast to rise above freezing.

Check back with MetroPhilly.us for the latest updates on the storm as it nears Philadelphia.

Looming SNAP cutoff brings shutdown home to Philly

The federal shutdown grows more real every day for SNAP recipients.

We're now on Day 27 of the partial federal shutdown as the government goes without funding due to Democrats and President Trump's impasse over the latter's demands for funding for a border wall with Mexico, and every day, little changes become more apparent.

One of these changes hit many Philadelphians earlier this week, when benefits recipients of the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) were alerted that on Friday SNAP benefits for the entire month of February will be transferred early to their EBT cards — and no funds will be forthcoming in February.

"You will not get more benefits in February, so make sure to budget carefully," reads a message sent to SNAP users.

As the shutdown drags on without an end in sight, that means it's unclear when more SNAP benefits — provided by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) — will come.

One SNAP recipient described the message as making them feel like they were in "The Walking Dead," the post-apocalyptic zombie TV show.

Pennsylvania Department of Human Services (DHS) Secretary Teresa Miller said in an announcement that the state is sending letters to all 1.8 million Pennsylvanians who receive SNAP benefits to alert them to the change. Nearly half a million are in Philadelphia — almost a third of the city's population. Nationwide, 40 million Americans are enrolled in the SNAP program.

"This early payment allows us to get SNAP recipients their benefits for February, but they will have to make this payment last for an undefined period as the shutdown continues," Miller said in a statement.

DHS said they are "awaiting information" from the USDA as to whether or not SNAP funds will be made available for March benefits, depending on how long the shutdown continues.

Miller also took the U.S. government to task for letting SNAP benefits be affected by the shutdown squabble.

"Changes in the way people get their benefits and uncertainty regarding future benefits creates confusion and concern that should be avoidable," Miller said. "The federal government must come to a solution so people who already face food insecurity do not continue to be caught in the middle of a situation that they did not create."

There are more than 800,000 federal employees across the U.S. either furloughed or working without pay during shutdown, 14 percent of whom make less than $50,000 a year. In Pennsylvania, there are approximately 12,000 federal employees affected by the shutdown.

In the meantime, some food pantry programs like Philabundance are stepping up to offer aid to the public. Visit Philabundance.org for information about getting access to their food pantries.

SNAP recipients in Philadelphia can call 215-560-7226 with questions; outside Philadelphia, citizens can call their local County Assistance Office or the statewide customer service center at 1-877-395-8930.

As shutdown lingers, Pelosi asks Trump to delay State of the Union address

Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi. GETTY IMAGES

With Trump's address set for Jan. 29, Pelosi is asking if he could deliver the speech from the Oval Office instead of Congress.

With the partial government shutdown dragging into its 26th day, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Wednesday urged President Donald Trump to reschedule his State of the Union address — a move that could deny the president the opportunity to use the pageantry of the speech to attack Democrats in their own chamber over the impasse.

With Trump's address set for Jan. 29, Pelosi wrote him a letter citing security concerns because the Secret Service, which is required to provide security, has not received funding during the dispute.

The standoff was triggered by Trump's demand for a round of funding for his promised wall on the U.S.-Mexico border.

Presidents traditionally deliver the address, which lays out the administration's goals for the upcoming year, in the House of Representatives' chamber before a joint session of Congress and the majority of the Cabinet.

Democrats took control of the House after last November's congressional elections. During the shutdown, Trump has routinely blamed them for the stalemate, although he had earlier said he would take responsibility.

Pelosi, speaking to reporters, suggested that if Trump would not agree to reschedule the speech until the government reopens, he could deliver it from the Oval Office instead, a setting that would lack the grandeur of a congressional address.

The White House had no immediate comment on Pelosi's request, and her letter appeared to have taken aides by surprise. It pointed out that she had invited Trump to make the State of the Union address at the Capitol but said the shutdown complicated the situation.

"Sadly, given the security concerns and unless government reopens this week, I suggest we work together to determine another suitable date after government has reopened for this address or for you to consider delivering your State of the Union address in writing to the Congress," Pelosi wrote.

In response, Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen said on Twitter her department and the Secret Service were prepared to handle a presidential speech at the Capitol.

Rep. Jim Jordan of the House Freedom Caucus, a group of conservative Republicans allied to Trump, said Pelosi's move showed Democrats are "more focused on stopping the president than they are on serving the country."

Meanwhile, both sides in the long-running conflict sought to ratchet up the pressure. Democratic senators huddled on the outdoor steps leading to the Senate in 39-degree, windy Washington weather, holding large photographs of constituents furloughed by the shutdown or otherwise affected by it.

Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer said Trump "is using these men and women as pawns. Using them in an extortion game saying, 'I am going to hurt these people unless I get my way.'"

At the same time, the president hosted a bipartisan group of House members to discuss finding a solution to the impasse. White House Press Secretary Sarah Sanders said the meeting was constructive.

Democrats who met with Trump said they called on him to end the shutdown and then talk about the divisive issues.

FOOD DELIVERY CYCLISTS RIDING ON THE SIDEWALK

Sometimes, I'll be walking down the sidewalk, minding my own business, when all of the sudden one of those food delivery guys on a motorized bicycle will come zooming out of nowhere from behind and almost plow into me. This infuriates me to no end! I almost get mowed down every other day by someone riding at a breakneck pace to drop off someone's Seamless order. It's not just on the sidewalk, either. I will be in the middle of the crosswalk and delivery guy will fly down a one-way street in the wrong direction to almost take me out. If this is the way that I die, at least I will be covered in a blanket of something delicious. But alas, it's not my time. And in most cases, I'm just heading home to order something anyway. Maybe it's all a vicious circle that I'm a part of?!?!

Foy and Rodriguez own Cry Baby Pasta SOCIETY HILL FILMS

No tears after eating here

Cry Baby Pasta opens this weekend

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

It's only been about 15 months since a devastating fire destroyed the popular South Street eatery Bridget Foy's. Foy's (originally East Philly Café) was family owned and known for serving Philadelphians delicious meals for almost four decades.

Now, Bridget and her husband Paul Rodriguez-the owners of the beloved cornerstone spot-have turned the page with the opening of their new restaurant Cry Baby Pasta while Foy's is still undergoing construction (Foy's is set to open again this Fall.)

Cry Baby Pasta boasts a vast Italian inspired menu from husband-and-wife team chefs David Gilberg and Carla Goncalves, a 55-seat dining room, a 12-seat oak bar and a warm atmosphere that will make anyone feel at home — in a chic way.

"We are thrilled to return to doing what we love," said Bridget Foy. "We want to thank each and every person for sending their love and support during the difficult time after the fire. We had an outpouring of support from not only our amazing customers and locals — but from people around the region and the East Coast.

"We are so excited to reopen Bridget Foy's later this year — and in the meantime get back to being the hosts in our brand new restaurant, Cry Baby Pasta. We hope to make new memories with everyone at what we hope will become a neighborhood staple — and we can't express how excited we are to open our doors this week. It isn't the journey we imagined, but from the fire it led us to a new adventure and we can't wait to share it with everyone."

Cry Baby Pasta features a "fun, casual, modern and colorful atmosphere" with a menu that reflects the same values. Every dish is made from scratch and will take your taste buds on a ride to a saucier and tastier place. Chefs Gilberg and Goncalve wanted to create simply presented dishes with flavors and zest that are incomparable. The menu consists of housemade pastas, sides, starters, bruschetta and large plates, as well as housemade bread and pastries. There will also be seasonal vegetables featured for some of the mouth-watering menu items.

Foy and Rodriguez wanted to create a neighborhood spot where a group of friends could hang out, sip on some wine, eat incredible food and chat all while feeling cozy. Walking in the door should feel like a warm hug — Foy and Rodriguez get that. "I call it a rock 'n' roll pasta bar — where you can let your hair down and be yourself — share dishes — find something for everyone — with our fun and quirky style of branding and design," said Foy.

Cry Baby has a full line of spirits, six craft beers by the draft, four wines by the tap, 35 wines by the bottle and an Italian-inspired cocktail menu.

Cry Baby will be open seven days a week with the bar opening at 4 pm and the dining room opening at 5 p.m. The kitchen will be open until 10 p.m. on Sunday-Thursday and midnight on Friday and Saturday. Cry Baby will also implement an outdoor seating area when the weather gets warmer, a happy hour menu later this winter and possible brunch, lunch and delivery options in the future.

Cry Baby Pasta opens on Jan. 18 at 4 pm and is located at 27 S. 3rd St., Philadelphia. For more information and reservations visit crybabypasta.com

National Geographic astronaut/photographer Terry Virts will be in Philly on Jan. 17.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

National Geographic astronaut and photographer Terry Virts has shot more than 300,00 pictures of the Earth the International Space Station. Ahead of his Jan 17 show at the Kimmel Center, Virts talked to Metro about what his incredible, out-of-this world experiences and why you should never say never.

What came first, your interest in photography or space?
I think it was Apollo. I remember the first book I ever read was Apollo. I was just captivated by the moon at a very young age and being an astronaut. A little while later I got my first camera in elementary school. It was kind of the same time but I think the space came before photography.

Do you have a favorite photo that you've taken?
It's hard to say favorite, you know I've taken over 300,000. But the one in particular that stands out is the very last picture that I took. I wanted to get one more good sunset because I love sunsets. So I went down and I took off the window cover, which is this plastic thing that would ruin your pictures, I set the camera up and I got this starburst image of the sun over this rounded curved Earth since I used a really wide 10-millimeter lens. I looked at the preview screen on the camera and I thought okay, this is the best picture I'm ever going to take in my life, I'm done- no more pictures. So I packed the camera, pulled the card out, downloaded it and I literally went down the Russian Segment, put on my space suit and came back to Earth. But I think maybe in some ways I'll save the best for last.

What has been the biggest obstacle or challenge that you've been faced with through all of your endeavors?
The hardest thing I've had to do as far as just training was learning Russian. The Russian language is really difficult, and I love languages. I was a French minor in college and lived in Germany where I learned German. So it's not that languages are so difficult but the Russian language is pretty hard. I think another one of the challenges that I've had to overcome is when you say you want to be an astronaut people think that's crazy and no one gets to be an astronaut. I just internally had to tell myself this is what I want to do. Or this is what I'm going to do. I'm realistic and not everybody gets to do it, but I set my mind out to do what I wanted to do. I was part lucky but I also think a big part of it was I was willing to go for it. One of the messages I talk about in my speeches is don't tell yourself no. It's very easy for younger people and some older people as well to do that, they have this dream and they think it's never going to happen so they never even get out of the starting gate. That's what one of my messages is. Get out of the starting gate, because if you don't you're not going to get it, and if you do you might. If nothing else you'll learn something along the way.

Any more space trips coming up in your future?

You know I've learned to never say never. I don't plan on it, I retired from NASA two years ago and when I did that's a one-way door you walk through. So I hadn't planned on it, but now there are commercial companies so who knows?

What can the people of Philadelphia expect from your Nat Geo Live event?

They will learn a lot about what its like in space and they will see beautiful images of Earth and our universe. More importantly than either one of those things is hopefully they'll learn some important lessons from life down here on Earth. Space for me is the vehicle or the mechanism, it's the means but it's not the end. The end is people and life on Earth.

'Star Trek: Discovery' crew talks Spock's arrival

Ethan Peck's take on the iconic character will play a pivotal role this season.

ANDREW HUSBAND

There's a new Spock in town. CBS ALL ACCESS

The news that Michelle Yeoh's character would be getting her own spin-off series kicked things off ahead of the "Star Trek: Discovery" season 2 premiere this week. CBS All Access also has plans for an animated comedy program and another series that's all about Patrick Stewart's Jean-Luc Picard from "Star Trek: The Next Generation." Despite these wonderful things, what fans of Gene Roddenberry's expansive universe care most about right now is the return of Spock.

In April of last year, CBS announced that Ethan Peck, the grandson of legendary actor Gregory Peck, would be donning the pointed ears for season 2. Since then, the first images and trailers of Michael Burnham's (Sonequa Martin-Green) foster brother have appeared across the internet. Many fans have been left wondering if the character's second revival in recent memory could possibly do right by Leonard Nimoy, the actor who first played him in the original series. According to Peck, Martin-Green and the rest of the "Discovery" cast and crew, fans have nothing to worry about.

"It's really scary and hugely humbling," Peck tells Metro about taking on the iconic role. "I'm deeply honored. I've put a lot of work into it, and I have a lot more work to do before it's over."

As the first season revealed, Spock's family fostered Burnham, a fully human child, from a young age after her parents were killed by Klingons at a joint human-Vulcan research facility. Her relationship with them later became strained, both because of the massive cultural differences between the two races and for other reasons that haven't quite been revealed.

"It is a very complicated and difficult relationship," says Martin-Green. "We dig into it as deep as we can go this season. I think it's very courageous and very well done. It's beautiful. I mean, it's ugly but it's also beautiful."

Whether or not longtime "Star Trek" fans will buy into the sibling relationship's depiction and explanation in season 2 remains to be seen. After all, many are still unhappy about "Discovery"'s initial decision to retcon the original series' canon by giving Spock a foster sister. The USS Enterprise's science officer never mentioned having a sibling in his previous appearances, so why start now?

Executive producer and writer Alex Kurtzman recognizes the complaints and concerns of some viewers. As an avid fan himself, however, he's quick to emphasize he and his team went to great lengths to ensure Nimoy's legacy.

"You have to start by saying that no one can fill their shoes. Leonard Nimoy is Leonard Nimoy and Zachary Quinto is Zachary Quinto," he tells Metro. "What we need to ask ourselves is, 'What is the spirit of this character and why has it endured through so many different actors?' We have to ask how we can maintain that while also finding an actor who can bring their own thing to it. It's not really about doing an imitation of another performance. It's about getting into the beating heart of who Spock is."

"Star Trek: Discovery" season 2 premieres Jan. 17 at 8:30 p.m. ET on CBS All Access.

Aurora northern polar lights in night sky over Northern Norway. SIO

9 Tourists have died seeking this attraction

Keep your eyes off the skies and on the road.

Fodor's Travel

According to police, more tourists are wrecking their vehicles because they are distracted by the Northern Lights. Reports claim 18 people died of traffic crashes in Iceland last year, and at least half were foreign tourists.

"Weather and road conditions are one thing, but it also comes down to very problematic behavior with some tourist drivers," Akureyri Police Superintendent Johannes Sigfusson told Sky News recently.

Because of light pollution, the natural phenomenon—which is the result of collisions between electrically-charged particles from the sun that enter the atmosphere—is often viewed outside of the cities like Reykjavik, the country's capital, and Akureyri, where the sun sets as early as 2:43 p.m. Sigfusson says stopping in the middle of the road to capture a photo while the Northern Lights are out is especially hazardous.

He also pointed out the constant changing of weather affects roads and, "the risk is compounded in the middle of the night when an inexperienced driver is deprived of sleep and with one eye on the sky." To remedy this, more companies near cities are offering bus tours so that drivers won't put themselves at risk.

However, efforts to improve the infrastructure of Iceland's roads has also been problematic as it has not been able to keep with the increasing number of visitors. The Icelandic Road Administration found that a fourth of Iceland's one-lane bridges—there are more than 700—are more than 60 years old.

If you're looking to view the Northern Lights safely and responsibly in Iceland (and opt out of a bus trip), drive carefully. Have a destination in mind before getting behind the wheel and focus on the roads—especially those that only have space for one vehicle—until coming to a complete stop in an area that is a safe distance from traffic. The Icelandic Transport Authority also recommends you refrain from speeding on any mountain roads, as they are often very narrow. "The same goes for many bridges, which are only wide enough for one car at a time," reads the Authority's website. JESSE TABIT

Golden Tate (No. 19) of the Philadelphia Eagles. GETTY IMAGES

Should the Eagles re-sign Golden Tate?

Along with Nick Foles and Brandon Graham, the Eagles will have to decide if they want to bring back Tate for another season.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

With the Philadelphia Eagles' season coming to an unceremonious end last Sunday in New Orleans, it is time to look toward the offseason.

Over the next few weeks, the Eagles will have to make some tough decisions about a couple of key players from their Super Bowl run, such as quarterback Nick Foles and defensive end Brandon Graham.

Outside of these fan favorites, there are a host of other players who will be free agents that made key plays down the stretch to help the Eagles reach the postseason.

Veteran wide receiver Golden Tate III is one of those free agents whom the Eagles' front-office brass will have to take some time to think about re-signing.

The Eagles acquired Tate back in October at the trade deadline from the Detroit Lions in exchange for a 2019 third-round pick. On paper, the idea of Tate in Philly's offense seemed like a slam-dunk addition, especially with what he did in Detroit.

Despite not being a vertical deep threat, Tate is a YAC (yards after the catch) machine whom you can use in various formations. However, the Eagles' offensive coaching staff had troubles integrating the 31-year-old wide receiver into the game plan through early on.

In his first three games, Tate only had 11 receptions (20 targets) for 97 yards and zero touchdowns. From there, Eagles fans started to question if the team made the right decision to use a draft pick on the veteran wideout.

But to his credit and that of the Eagles' coaching staff, they did not give up on making this transition work. Tate would eventually have a breakout performance in a must-win game against Washington in Week 13.

The former second-round pick had seven receptions (seven targets) for 85 yards and a touchdown. In that game alone, you could tell that the Eagles made it an emphasis to get him involved early and often.

However, Tate's production dropped off again toward the end of the regular season. But in the NFC Wild Card Game against the Chicago Bears, he came up huge with five catches for 46 yards and the game-winning touchdown on fourth-and-goal.

Tate finished his short stint in Philadelphia with 30 catches for 278 yards and two touchdowns. On Monday at the NovaCare Complex, he expressed his desire to return to the Eagles.

"My time is limited. I want to go to a team that has a chance," Tate said. "If I don't stay here — of course, I would love to stay here. My years are limited. I don't have time to go somewhere that wants to rebuild. I need to go somewhere where they believe they can win now. That's what I want to do, but who knows. Something I have to think about."

While it is nice to hear that Tate would like to return next season, the Eagles are currently strapped for cash heading into free agency. The only way he could come back is if he would be willing to take a significant pay cut.

Along with the financial ramifications, the Eagles' front office also has to factor in its wide receiver depth chart heading into next season.

Even though Nelson Agholor and Alshon Jeffery are locked in, Philly has to decide if they want to keep Mike Wallace, who missed a majority of the season with an injury, or Jordan Matthews, who was a solid addition when the team was decimated at the position.

They also have to factor in Mack Hollins, who was placed on IR, and Shelton Gibson, who had a stellar preseason but disappeared in the regular season.

If the two sides can come to a low-cost contract filled with incentives, then maybe there's a chance Tate comes back. With a full offseason, he can add another dimension to this passing game and make life easier for Carson Wentz.

Report: Sixers looking at Atlanta's Taurean Prince

The 25-year-old wing player is having another solid season with the Hawks.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

The Sixers are still searching the trade market in hopes of upgrading their bench, despite signing veteran swingman Corey Brewer to a 10-day contract on Tuesday.

Earlier this week, we wrote about how the Sixers are reportedly interested in the quartet of Frank Kaminsky, Jeremy Lin, Noah Vonleh and Mike Scott, and are willing to give up their 2019 first-round draft pick.

However, you can now add another player to their trade deadline target list.

Kevin O'Connor of The Ringer mentioned on "The Corner 3" podcast that the Sixers, along with the Portland Trail Blazers and Oklahoma City Thunder, are looking at Atlanta Hawks 3-and-D wing Taurean Prince.

O'Connor also said on the podcast that Prince is exactly what Philly needs, as the Wilson Chandler acquisition has not worked out for them.

Nevertheless, if the Sixers can get Prince, it would be a hell of an upgrade for their nonexistent wing depth. This season, the 25-year-old forward is averaging 14.3 points, 4.0 rebounds, 2.1 assists and 1.2 steals in 27.2 minutes per game.

He is also shooting 43.8 percent from the field (career-high) and 37.6 percent from three-point range on 6.1 attempts per game.

In addition to these solid shooting stats, Prince has a DRtg (defensive rating) of 113 this season, which might be concerning to some. But he does a great job on the glass with a defensive rebounding percentage of 14.2.

Last season, the 25-year-old Prince had a breakout campaign, becoming one of Atlanta's top scoring options. He averaged 14.1 points on 42.6 percent shooting from the field and 38.5 percent from three-point range.

With all that being said, what would it take for the Sixers to pry Prince from the Hawks? On the podcast, O'Connor states that Philly could package either Zhaire Smith or Markelle Fultz in a possible deal.

I highly doubt that the Hawks would take Fultz, especially with everything that has transpired with him, plus they already have a point guard in Trae Young.

Smith, however, is an intriguing option as it would give the Hawks a young 3-and-D player whom they can mold with Young, John Collins and Kevin Huerter.

The only issue with moving Smith is that Philly traded Mikal Bridges for him on draft night. Therefore, one might think that they want to see some return on their first-round investment first.

With the trade deadline only a few weeks away, it should be interesting to see if the Sixers move their first-round pick to upgrade their team for the stretch run.

Pederson: Carson Wentz is the quarterback going forward

The Eagles' head coach held a joint press conference with Howie Roseman earlier this week.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

After the dust had settled from the Philadelphia Eagles' heart-wrenching loss to the No.1 seed New Orleans Saints last Sunday in the NFC Divisional Round of the 2018 NFL playoffs, head coach Doug Pederson, along with executive vice president of football Howie Roseman, held a joint press conference earlier this week.

Among the topics discussed were the futures of quarterbacks Nick Foles and Carson Wentz, who have been joined at the hip for the last two seasons.

While it has been widely reported that Foles will have a quality trade market this offseason, Pederson made his intentions clear about who will be the Eagles' starting quarterback next season.

"Yes, Carson is the quarterback going forward. And in Nick's case, listen, we would love to have everybody back throughout the roster," he said. "But as I've said many, many times, it's not about one guy. It's about the team. We're going to do what's best for the team."

Wentz returned earlier this season from a serious knee injury that he suffered last season, but ended up missing the last five games due to a fractured vertebra.

Before suffering the season-ending back injury, Wentz put up some solid numbers across the board. He completed a career-high 69.6 percent of his passes for 3,074 yards, 21 touchdowns and seven interceptions.

However, he was sacked an enormous 31 times, which was the second-highest mark of his young career. That being said, it does not come as a surprise to see the Eagles sticking with Wentz.

Regardless of some fans and analysts thinking that Foles should be the guy going forward, it would be foolish for the front office to move on from their franchise quarterback this early into his career.

GETTY IMAGES

Even though Foles looked good in spurts this season and last, Wentz has a dynamic arm and does things on the field that the reigning Super Bowl MVP simply cannot do.

Along those same lines, with Foles not in the picture for next season, there will be immense pressure on Wentz to not only stay healthy but also lead the Eagles to the playoffs.

"It could [add pressure]. Without a doubt," Wentz said. "You look at that and you could say it could put more pressure. I mean, you can say coming into the season there was more pressure."

"But I do everything I can to block that stuff out. I think right now, going forward, my focus is getting my body right. And to play this game freely the way I did last year before the injury and cut it loose. Get rid of all that pressure and anxiety and whatever it may be, just play the game freely. And that's where I'm going to get to."
